even if it did not succeed at that time in avoiding a further general net decline in prices, was continued during the early part of stock exchange business today and resulted in considerable advances in this period in the quotations for most of the active shares.

In the latter half of the day pressure was again brought to bear upon the market, and was continued until the end of business, leaving an irregular final mixture of advances and declines.

The weakest quarter of the market was once more to-day, as it has been for a fortnight past, the metal stocks, or at least Amalgamated Copper, American Smelting and Refining and the National Lead shares. In a current attack upon these the bear party in the market has concentrated all its power, relying for its chief support in the onslaught on the well known depressed condition of the copper metal market.
